oldstone: Quality schools, shrinking funds

nixed population.

Stephen Goldstone, 43, superintendent of the Al-ified School District, must walk a tightrope above the many divergent interests and constituencies of the district, including 2,250 students, 2,000 adult school students, 98 teachers, 202 other district staffers, parents and the community at large. He must also cope with hundreds of state and federal rules and laws.

The Board of Education is presently in the midst of its annual review of Goldstone's and — by extension — the district's goals. Board president Dr. Gerald Brunetti says that the evaluation is "like a state of the union process."

"We agreed when I was hired that there should be an evaluation — a review of my progress every year," Goldstone said. "The establishment of next year's goals has to be based upon the success or failures of last year's goals."

Goldstone, who began working at the Albany schools on July 1, 1980, is now going through his third review process. Last year the board charged Goldstone to "analyze all available financial resources" to implement the district's goals.

Support from local sources dried up drastically after the passage of Proposition 13 in 1978. Funding from the state has remained practically at the same level for two years. In addition, no one anticipates any appreciable growth in support from Sacramento for the coming academic year.

"Educational foundations have been established in a variety of school districts," Goldstone said. He mentioned Beverly Hills and Piedmont as two districts which have set up such foundations.

"The problem is that to set up these foundations a community needs to have a large industrial base or a very wealthy citizenry. Albany doesn't have this," he explained.

With the advent this year of the Albany High Boosters Club, a kind of quasi-private foundation has developed: "The Boosters Club may be able to raise $150,000 or more each year, not a small amount out of a budget of nearly $7 million," Goldstone said.

Jockey Teresa English: "I could never work in an office"

She rides, rises swiftly at Golden Gate Fields

By STEVE TADY

Teresa English's solid handshake answers all the questions one might have about how a 96-pound female jockey can handle a thousand pounds of hard-charging thoroughbred.

Her powerful hands and long, muscular fingers are proof of the strength the 25-year-old Rodeo resident calls forth every day in her chosen profession — horse racing.

Proof of her skill can be found in her steady climb toward the top of the Bay Area jockey standings and her 1982 record-setting win at Bay Meadows when she became the first woman and the first apprentice jockey to win a prestigious jockey competition.

This season at Albany's Golden Gate Fields, English is ranked eighth. She was ranked fifth in last autumn's Bay Meadows racing.

Though now considered an apprentice, English will become a full-fledged jockey in July — after spending the minimum time possible as an apprentice.

Jockeys are no longer apprentices when they

City squabbles over pensions

No solution is likely soon

By JUDY POLUMBAUM

ALBANY — An exchange between the chairman of Albany's Charter Review Committee and City Council members which teetered between acrimony and civility highlighted an otherwise routine council meeting Monday night.

The focus of the tiff was Albany's pension problems, and specifically a detailed study of the problems prepared by Charter Review Committee head James Cleveland.

Cleveland came before the council Monday hoping to read the minutes of the committee's last meeting "into the record." The minutes contained a series of resolutions urging the council to take a position on Cleveland's pension report.

But council members seemed to feel that the document was already a public record and available to all those who would be interested.

The council also felt that it was not the time nor the place to discuss Cleveland's findings, preferring to wait for the recommendations of the city's Pension Advisory Committee. That committee, appointed last summer, is expected to present the council with a final report in several weeks.

St. Patrick's Day: It's more than green beer

The Open Forum accepts essays on topics of general or community interest. Send submissions of no more than 750 words — three typed, double-spaced pages — to Editor, Times Journal, 1247 Solano Ave., Albany 94706. This week's column is by Alta Bates Hospital, Berkeley.

Everyone becomes a little Irish on St. Patrick's Day. It means the "wearin of the green," a little "gosh and begorrah," and, of course, drinking green beer...lots of green beer.

"In fact," says Dan Graney, of the Alta Bates Hospital CareUnit, "drinking and St. Patrick's Day are almost synonymous. Many people drink more on St. Patty's Day than they do any other time of the year, including New Year's. It's a big party day."

It is also a "drink and drive" day, one that can be dangerous for both the drinker and other drivers on the road. The CareUnit staff, who treats alcoholism and drug abuse, offer the following hints for a safer, but still fun, St. Patrick's Day:

- Winter colds, antihistamines and booze, even beer, don't mix. Lay off the alcohol if you are on medication or you may wake up with even more than a hangover. Antihistamines double or triple alcohol's impact.
- The more non-alcoholic fluids you can take with the drinks, the better off you are. Orange juice, tomato juice and grapefruit juice provide you with the sodium and potassium you lose when you drink.

Along those lines, drink two glasses of water for ever alcohol drink. A 150-pound person can take around one drink a hour without having alcohol build up in his or her system. Any more and it is dangerous to drive.

emporary teachers: in the twilight zone

ARBARA ERICKSON

,300 teachers in the Rich-nd Unified School District, promise of no layoffs this as welcome relief. But to 100 temporary employees brought no joy at all.

nd Unified, like other tricts, has a sizeable group who work in a twilight sta-nely laid off in June and iously through the sum-rehired.

eachers do not get layoff permanent employees, en expect to get a farewell pick up their last paycheck of the school year, all the ers of them have been on temporary status for four years or more.

"We're getting jerked around by the system," said one temporary special education teacher. "There's no job security at all, and I'm not building up any tenure."

Phyllis Ryus, a librarian at Pinole Valley High School, said "You can't plan your life. You don't know if you're going to have a job next year."

The status of temporary teachers contrasts with that of permanent instructors who, according to state law, must receive preliminary layoff notices by March 15 and final notices by May 15.

This year, Richmond Unified voted not to make layoffs for the first time in four years, and the news came as a morale booster for many on the teaching staff — all except the temporaries.

Ernie Ciarrocchi, executive director of United Teachers of Richmond, said the union understands the need for temporary teachers, but, he added, the arrangement has a "basic unfairness."

Year-to-year hiring, he said, "has a chilling effect on the exercise of one's rights." Temporary teachers, he said, are "often not willing to pursue grievances."

In a typical case, he said, a teacher might feel that a principal has made an unfair evaluation but she would hesitate to file an official complaint for fear it would hurt her chances of being hired for a permanent post.

Or a teacher may be assigned too many students, beyond the negotiated class size limits, and yet not dare to speak up.

"If you file a grievance," one temporary said, "you're kind of labeled as a troublemaker."

And, Ciarrocchi said, "as a temporary teacher you don't have the same kind of transfer rights. How do you apply in May for a transfer if you don't have a contract next year? So they get last choice."

Ciarrocchi also objects to the district's practice of assigning temporary teachers to a variety of slots, not using them to fill the place of teachers who go on leave.

"It's often done very arbitrarily," he said. "We're trying to mandate that temporary employees can only replace a specific employee on leave."

This year, Richmond Unified has about 125 temporary teachers, he said, fewer than in past years because many were laid off when the district cut back on secondary school periods last year.

Ciarrochi said that about 30 of these 125 are not replacements but hired to fill jobs in special education. A new state law will close that loophole, he said, and require districts to create permanent positions in state-mandated programs like special education and bilingual classes.

But David Taylor, assistant superintendent for personnel, said Richmond Unified has always hired only to replace the number of teachers on leave. Many temporaries work in special education, he said, because that is where the district has had many openings.

Taylor also said temporary teachers hired on probation (who can become permanent after three years) get salary credit for each year they have worked at least three quarters time and also get up to two years credit toward tenure.

He said the district does not assign temporaries directly to fill in for teachers on leave because this sometimes causes problems when enrollment goes down at schools. Assigning a temporary in that case, he said, might force another permanent teacher to leave the site.

As for the fear of filing grievances, have 45 wins or have been racing steadily for a year, whichever comes last. English has well over 60 wins.

Then, she joins the ranks of the seasoned riders.

But it might be hard to convince some other jockeys that she has yet to join the ranks of the seasoned pros.

Last fall, for instance, five of the best jockeys in the world came to Bay Meadows to compete with the top five Meadows jookeys in the Pan Am Invitational Jockey Championships.

English demonstrated her ability when she took the secStockton Fair, she got her first win. "I was on a horse called Ultra High and that's what I was, ultra high."

Since those days, however, her body has taken its share of bumps and bruises.

"I have back problems and with all the pounding my hips can get out of place. All the riding takes a toll," she said.

The recent success has made English somewhat of a media star. In the last several months, she has been on a radio talk show and two television stations have done features on her. Nearly every newspaper in the Bay Area has done a feature story on her.

She says it has helped, not distracted her. "I don't get nervous anymore and I've learned a lot about people with all the interviews," she added.

And the interviewers have learned a lot about her. With a parting handshake, the reminder of Teresa English's strength and skill lingers.

Plaza sale means big bucks added.

"Homart owns the rest of the buildings and the lease to the other land," Bacon said. "The land not occupied by Longs and Capwell's is owned by Travelers Insurance. It's valued around $2 million.

"I don't know what the arrangements for the sale are," he added, "but I know the overall price is $18,075,000. That means rents are going to go up."

Kirby's owner David Viale anticipated about a $2,000 monthly increase from his current $5,000 lease, which expires in June. He maintains he had a verbal agreement with Homart that his lease would be renewed for 15 years and is angry that it was sold without him having an opportunity to match the Pizza Time Theatre lease, which he says is somewhere between $8,000 and $10,000 a month.

He estimates that the Pizza Time lease will be about $1,500 a month over what he had expected to pay.

"That amounts to a lot of money over a 15-year period," he said.

Bacon said he personally asked the city's Director of Community Development, Jean Smith, to get a ruling from the City Attorney's office on his eligibility to vote on the Pizza Time application.

His disqualification leaves the commission with six members to vote on the issue, creating the possibility of a tie vote.

"I don't know what would happen in that case," he said. "I think someone would probably change their vote. I expect an appeal, no matter who wins. Then the City Council will have to make the decision.

Bacon was asked by the city's planning staff to poll Plaza merchants on their feelings about Chuck E. Cheese coming in. A meeting held Tuesday for that purpose produced a turnout of 14 tenants, all of whom opposed the new applicant.

Although he didn't vote on the issue because of his status as a commissioner, Bacon said Bullard's decision frees him to express his feelings on the Pizza Time application.

"I definitely feel that what is in my best interest is in the best interest of the Plaza," he said. "Kirby's provides us with a customer base. I don't think Chuck E. Cheese will. People will be bringing their children there and taking them home. They won't be stopping to shop.

"In a shopping center like this," he added, "everybody has to work together."

Goldstone: creative 1980s school financi

The district also owns three pieces of property which could conceivably become income-producing.

"One site is a part of Cougar Field," he said. "Another is the MacGregor School site. One idea — very much in a preliminary phase — is to build apartments or condominiums on the MacGregor site, leaving the first floor of such a complex for the district's use.

"There is also the Solano Avenue property occupied by the library. The city has a 99-year lease from the district on the property. One idea we have is the erection of a multi-story office block.

"Such a development could solve the library's severe housing needs and also generate income for the district," Goldstone said.

One of the more innovative budget-enhancing strategies Goldstone is contemplating involves the creation of what he calls "a micro-utility" at Albany High's swimming pool. Besides using a heat conserving blanket to cover the pool's surface, both the pool's and the shower's heating requirements would be met through solar cells which would be installed on the high school's roof.

"Any additional energy produced the utility could sell. We're working on a deal where the initial cost of setting this up is paid for exclusively by the savings which we would realize," he said.

But even with all these ideas to save money and to generate income, Goldstone is worried.

"There needs to be a new emphasis in education," he said. "The very health of California is suffering. We need to have a strong infrastructure — this includes education — if we are to attract business.

"A majority of people in the United States today have no contact with schools. As the population's average age becomes older, other agencies and areas are funded. But we are all still responsible for the health of society."

Goldstone is proud of the fact that a large proportion of Albany High's seniors go on to an institution of higher learning. "But," he said, "we need to be more aware of the kids who don't intend to go on to college.

"We're not just a prep school. We're trying to broaden offerings in industrial arts and business education. We shouldn't pigeon-hole or stereotype kids."

With a current population of only 766 students, Albany High School combines the advantages of small town intimacy with the disadvantages of a relatively limited number of class offerings.

"We need to send some kids out to the university or to other districts to cover some of the subjects which we can't teach," Goldstone said. "We have to try to meet the needs of all the kids."

Over the past year, the superintendent feels that there has been a great growth in communication between parents, staff, students and the community.

"There was some criticism regarding communication between the high school and the community. [illegible] change an atmosphere which had been [illegible] rumors, facts and half-facts — especially in [illegible] dent discipline.

"I think we've developed a climate of [illegible] Goldstone said. "When a teacher or [illegible] something now we can communicate it. Th[illegible] avenues of communication."

Pension problems unsolv

Vice-mayor William Johns told Cleveland that reading his committee's minutes aloud might be "dramatic" but would not accomplish anything. He suggested that Cleveland was "panicking" over the pension issue.

Cleveland in turn suggested that the council was trying to avoid the matter, saying, "I think there's a natural tendency to delay, to stall... I believe we'd better face this thing honestly and forthrightly, and I'm concerned we're not."

Cleveland's study, which he presented publically earlier this year, concluded that the city would have to take some drastic action to keep the pension fund from going bankrupt.

Albany's pension plan covers fire and police employees hired before mid-1971; others are under the statewide Public Employees Retirement System.

The city now faces ever-growing obligations to retirees under the old plan, while pension assets steadily shrink.

Cleveland blamed the problem on a 1969 court decision which tied pension payments to current salaries rather than actual salaries held at the time of retirement. And he suggested that only a court could provide a remedy.

He ruled out ever-escalating taxes to cover the obligations, saying Albany residents would not go along.

Council members Monday assured Cleveland they appreciated his work and were not ignoring the pension issue.

Councilman Edward McManus pointed out that the council had taken the problem seri[illegible] to set up the Pension Ad[illegible] mittee. He said the [illegible] awaiting that committee [illegible] he saw "no reason to [illegible] that format."

Temporary teachers f it hard to plan ahea

Taylor said, "This could be." He added that most temporary teachers who perform well have been rehired.

But the big problem, temporaries say, is the insecurity.

Nancy Giomi, a special education teacher, said her question each year is, "Will I have a job or won't I?"

This uncertainty, Ciarrocchi said, raises these problems: "How do you get a loan? How do you buy a house? The job only lasts a year."

And many teachers don't find out until the last week of summer if they are going to be rehired.

One temporary teacher said she was offered a job the afternoon of the day teachers were supposed to report for work in the fall. Others say they have not had their contracts in hand before October.

"They could let people know a little earlier," one teacher said. "Why they wait so long, I don't know."

The delay makes it impossible to plan in advance, she said, because "a temporary person doesn't like to barge into the school and start getting things ready before they have been notified."

Taylor, however, said the district is stuck with a system that forces late notice some of the time.

"We don't like it either," he said, but the district has to follow procedures in offering vacant slots first to permanent employees. And often, he said, teachers do not notify the district until August that they are not coming back.

After going through the legal notification and transfers, he said, the schools often cannot hire the temporaries until just before opening day.

Ciarrocchi said the problem of temporaries is not confined to Richmond Unified and not just to public education, but, he said, it creates a "ludicrous" situation in schools because so many are ... collect unemployment in the fall.

Bank suspect to grand ju

By BOB MANOR

A federal grand jury indictment against Harold Lee Benson, arrested in San Pablo for bank robbery, will be sought later this month, an FBI spokesman said late last week.

Benson, 26, was ordered out of an old shed and into the arms of the law by a heroic citizen last Wednesday after the bungled robbery of the Homestead Savings & Loan branch in the El Portal shopping center.

Benson is also being held on a no-bail warrant for allegedly violating parole, and is a suspect in two other robberies committed this year.

To speed court proceedings, a grand jury indictment against Benson will be sought soon, said FBI spokesman Frank Daniel. If the San Francisco-based jury hands down the indictment, further legal proceedings against the suspect will be conducted in that city.

Police said Benson is suspected of robbing $1,700 from Citicorp Savings in El Cerrito on Feb. 22 and $4,300 from a bank in Fairfield on Jan. 22. When the case against Benson is concluded here, he probably will be moved to Sacramento to face the Fairfield charge, said Daniel.

Giant sign to come d

By JUDY POLUMBAUM

ALBANY — The owners of Michael's Liquor Store on Solano Avenue have agreed to obey a city ultimatum to remove their giant rooftop sign, thus saving the city the trouble and expense of seeking a court order.

Carol Walker, who with her brother Michael Walker owns the liquor shop and a restaurant next door, said a contractor probably will remove the sign in early April.

"We're good citizens," she said. "We don't really want the city to go to court, and we don't want to go to court either. It wouldn't be productive for either of us."

But she added that she still thinks the city's decision was unfair and perhaps unconstitutional.

The city Planning Commission ordered the Walkers to take down their roof sign nearly a year ago because it exceeds sign space allowed by the city's sign ordinance.

The Walkers had recently bought the business, and the ordinance says that when a business changes hands the new owners must make all signs — even those erected legally before the sign regulations were adopted — conform to city size and space limitations.

The Walkers had hoped for a variance, saying they could not afford the cost of removing the sign. They also argued that the city was being unfair in forcing them to take down a sign which a former owner had put up legally.

After a couple of delays, the Walkers requested more time to see whether a bill now before the state legislature (which would require the city to pay for the cost of the sign removal) would pass.

The City Council last week decided, however, that the sign must come down immediately. The council ordered the city attorney and public works director to take whatever steps were necessary, including legal ... the decision.

Nutrition: Remember the basic four

The Basic Four — they've been around for a while, and those of us in food and nutrition have based a good deal of our teaching on them.

Teachers have scrambled for ways to put them across that are novel, intriguing, and tricky so that our message would infiltrate hard core food habits and rigid food prejudices. Eating life styles are hard to change. Ask any of us who have tried to lose weight.

Still, no matter how you approach it, the combinations of foods necessary for healthy human survival fall into the Basic Four format: Meats and Protein, Milk and Dairy, Breads and Cereals, and Fruits and Vegetables. At this time we are considering a fifth category of what is described as "calorie dense" foods. As you would imagine, the foods here are fats, sweets and alcohol. These foods have caloric value and little or no nutritional value but are realistically part of many diets and cannot be ignored.

One, two, eat a few Three — four, here's more

At a recent nutritional symposium I attended in Arizona, it was very encouraging to hear that as a nation "...we're doing better nutritionally than we think we are. We're actually pretty sensible," said Dr. Guarth Hansen, who holds the appointment of distinguished professor of nutrition and food sciences and biochemistry at Utah State University.

In his address "What Americans Are Eating Today," he showed us the results of many surveys from the American population and made some very interesting conclusions.

As you have heard from me many times befoe, we do eat far more protein than we need — almost twice as much. Our intake of calcium and iron, however, is less than we need, Hansen reports. We also seem to be a bit low in some of our B vitamins. But because we aren't absolutely sure of the requirements in this area, we really don't know how much supplement we need of these nutrients.

Do women eat better?

Generally speaking, "the quality of diets for men and women are surprisingly the same," said Hansen when reviewing some data from national surveys. However, it was found that men definitely eat less vitamin C (fruits and veggies) and less vitamin A (greens and yellow veggies, eggs, liver) than women do.

I'm wondering if this is possibly because men eat more meals out while on the job. Could we take restaurant foods to task on this? And yet, the American work force is being augmented by more and more women. Why do women choose different foods?

We could make some interesting speculations here — since we women seem to be the more diet-conscious sex. And yet, many of our fashionable diets are nutritionally outrageous and a source of concern in scientific communities. As Yul (otherwise known as the King of Siam) would say, "It's a puzzlement!"

The constant factor

One thing we have found out overall, stated Hansen, is that when we change or improve the diet of one member of the family, all the family follows. That makes the role of the family cook fairly clear to me. Hansen feels that "we have to teach people as a group to improve their diets." If one goes, so goes the family, so to speak. School districts, are you listening?

Nutritional time bomb

Nutritional deficiencies occuring early in life, which influence bone tissue, definitely influence the incidence of osteoporosis in later years.

Hansen, who is director of the nutrition and education information program for the USDA Science and Education Administration, was emphatic in his plea for balancing the diet through the application of the Basic Four Food Groups as a menu guide. For those of us preparing family foods, this means that each day we should adhere to the general rule of 2-2-4-4; two proteins, two dairy, four bread-cereals and four fruit-vegetable servings. For children and nursing mothers, the dairy requirement should go up, and for all of us, care should be taken to increase the iron intake. Supplements of vitamins A and D can be dangerously toxic, while excesses of the water-soluble B's and C's are easily eliminated. So says Dr. Hansen.

All in all, he emphasized that we should exercise moderation and variety in the choice and quantity of foods eaten. While that certainly is not a new concept, it is a

Getting down to business

An Albany corner gets a new lease on life

By ROBERTA ALEXANDER

ALBANY — The recession may be hurting Albany in some ways, but it hasn't prevented the construction and occupancy of one new business building.

The two-story structure at 1201 Solano Ave. has room for six tenants, and is already five-sixths occupied. According to the building's owner, Albany realtor Hal Hoffman, four of the spaces were rented even before construction was complete.

Hoffman is proud of the building, which is stucco, with glass and wooden doors. There are three shops at ground level; on the second floor are three offices, each with a bay window overlooking the street.

"This lot was the Solano Avenue dogpatch before the building went up," said Hoffman, who added that he had heard "no negative comments" about the building's appearance.

The corner structure contains 2,800 square feet of space, and soon will have adjacent parking, when a house on Cornell Avenue is torn down. The downstairs tenants sell children's clothing, antiques and southeast Asian crafts.

Denise Lovdal is the owner of Popcorn: A Children's Store, which features new and recycled children's clothing through size 7. She saw the need for such a store when helping her pregnant sister shop for baby clothes, much of which they thought was of poor quality and/or too expensive.

"I'm a real chintzy shopper," Lovdal said with a smile. "I want something that's cute, nicely made, good quality, and a good price."

Times Journal photos by Karen Preuss

The new building fills a former vacant lot

Two other stores in the area also sell children's clothes, but Lovdal thinks there's room for all.

"The baby boom is having babies. And kids outgrow their things so fast, there's a good market for reselling the clothes," she said.

Next door, in the middle shop, is the new Courtyard Antiques, moved from Colusa Circle where it was located for three and a half years. Owner Charles Parker had once hoped to benefit from Kensington's planned development in that area, but it remains in the discussion stage.

The new store will be divided between country-style antique furniture — what Parker calls "functional, made for common, rural people — and stationery and gift items. These will include a "tasteful line of reproductions," he said.

The corner store belongs to the Laotian Handcraft Store. According to owner Sang Cho, himself a member of the Mien tribe in Laos, the shop does not yet have as much merchandise as it needs. Most of the material comes from a refugee camp in Thailand.

"The refugees in the camp come from Laos. They have nothing to do in the camp, and not enough food," Cho said.

So he arranged for them to embroider tablecloths, purses and other fabric items, which he purchases and resells in the shop. His prices are low, he says, because he charges only for his expenses and does not figure American wage scales into his prices.

"This lot was the Solano Avenue dogpatch before the building went up," according to owner Hal Hoffman.

He also sells articles on consignment made by craftswomen both in the Bay Area and in the state of Washington. His wife runs the shop during the week, and he comes down on weekends.

The offices upstairs are occupied by Filippine Holiday Travel, Inc. and Bare Fax, a word processing service.

Sue Roach, manager of Bare Fax, said her business concentrates on doing resumes, multiple letters and reports for small companies which don't have their own word processors. For three years, Roach ran her service from her home.

"Last year I did $80,000 worth of business out of my washroom," she said.

Now she's got an office with five part-time typists and enough work to occupy her seven days a week.

"It's a lot for a woman with three kids under the age of four," Roach said with a laugh. "We were on food stamps when we started this business, so we've come a long way."

Sign of the times

We would like to correct two misstatements of fact expressed by Bob Groppo last week:

We not only did not "champion" the fight against the Liquor Barn, we did not oppose its establishment at all.

We do not oppose the city's sign ordinance, only its retroactive and illegal application. We are handling that opposition "within the system."

Coping with RUSD closures: Parents do have a choice

By BARBARA ERICKSON

Parents of students in the five Richmond Unified schools to be closed next year can send their children to any of the other 44 elementary sites if they make their requests by the end of April.

To ease the pain of readjustment, the school board voted Wednesday to let parents from El Monte, Balboa, Rancho, Serra, and Kerry Hills select their children's schools for the coming year as long as space is available.

This would apply to entering kindergarten students as well as those who are enrolled currently.

Notices to parents advising them how to choose sites, school officials said. Parents are to register children entering kindergarten next year in their present neighborhood schools, even if they are targeted for closing.

Meanwhile, parents at the five targeted sites are starting to "shop around" for a new school.

Edgel Watson, Rancho principal, said, "Many people are calling, especially about where they are going next year."

El Monte principal Steve Cederborg said parents have asked him "which schools in the immediate area have the best academic standing."

But at all of the sites, parents and staff were feeling nostalgic.

"Most are pretty sad," Sexton said, and Watson said, "Once the hard fact hits you, it makes a lot of difference."

The board also has agreed to look again at the need for crossing guards and traffic signals. The closings will reroute some students across dangerous intersections, they said, and more guards may be needed.

The district and the city of Richmond are negotiating the issue of crossing guards now, to decide who will pay for which guards and where the guards will be stationed.

Board members also directed the staff to begin immediately on a marketing strategy for the closed sites, but they disagreed on whether to rent the buildings to private schools.

Board members Don Lau and Eddie [illegible] said they oppose [illegible] to "compete" [illegible] board member [illegible] ton said he did [illegible]

Office Hours: 8:30 a.m.-5:00 p.m. Tuesday-Saturday

The new Richmond Marina is the most modern in the San Francisco Bay. It's conveniently located at the foot of Marina Way South and just 8 miles from Angel Island. Along with the 3 berths there is a free launch ramp open 24 hours a day, a beautiful esplande, restrooms, 13 acres of parks and a new freshwater marsh.

Future plans call for restaurants, condominiums, and office/commercial space. Eventually there will be a total of 2000 berths and 3500 condominiums, roughly the size of Sausalito.

RICHMOND MUSEUM

Richmond's history can be discovered at the Richmond Museum, 400 Nevin Avenue, on the corner of Fourth Street and Nevin Avenue, next to the Nevin Community Center.

A newly-renovated museum contains many photos and artifacts from Richmond's past. Display rooms — kitchen, bedroom and parlor — of a turn-of-the-century home have been set up, with appropriate artifacts and costumes along with many other exhibits.

A reference library and photograph files are also available to the researcher.

It was Richmond's first formal public library, built in 1910 and recently restored to its original appearance. It is one of the few Carnegie library buildings left in California.

The Richmond Museum is open to the public from 1:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m. on Saturdays and Sundays. Arrangements for visits at other times can be made by telephoning the Museum at 237-7387. Group tours are especially welcome.

PMS: Unmasking the 'female complex'

'Cures' date back to the 19th century

By JUDY POLUMBAUM

Lydia Pinkham, a 19th century Massachusetts entrepreneur, called it the "female complex." She marketed a cure labeled Vegetable Compound, with a 15 percent alcohol content.

Pinkam contended that her tonic could prevent murderous tendencies, claiming a Connecticut clergyman who had been killed by his wife would still have been alive if he had been drinking it.

The phenomenon that preoccupied Pinkham has come be known in this century as Premenstrual Syndrome, or PMS — a monthly affliction triggered by the biological processes of menstruation. It affects perhaps half of all adult American women, with sometimes devastating results for victims' careers, home situations and social lives.

The syndrome is characterized by a wide variety of symptoms, ranging from anxiety and tension to water retention and increased appetite. Sufferers of one variety may be suicidal.

The syndrome occurs before monthly menstruation and is not to be confused with menstrual cramps, although some women with PMS also get cramps.

The subject drew a lecture hall full of people to the UC-Berkeley campus recently to hear about what doctors have come to recognize is a real medical problem, something worthy of more than Pinkham's potent compound.

While the affliction varies in specifics, duration and severity from woman to woman, all sufferers experience the same set of symptoms regularly within the two weeks before their monthly menstrual period. The onset of the period generally brings relief — until the following month's menstrual cycle.

About 20 million American women may suffer from PMS, according to one of the conference speakers, Dr. Guy Abraham.

Three million cases are severe enough to cause work absenteeism and affect women's home and social lives, Abraham said.

Three million cases are severe enough to cause work absenteeism and affect women's home and social lives, Dr. Guy Abraham says.

He estimated the cost of the syndrome to American industry at $30 billion a year.

In the domestic arena, he said, the incidence of divorce among PMS sufferers is 15 times that among women without PMS.

While references to PMS-like symptoms go back centuries, women who had the syndrome were diagnosed as "hysteric" up to about 50 years ago. Dr. Robert Frank, a gynecologist, is credited with publishing the first medical paper in America to acknowledge PMS as a physiological problem.

In a study published in 1931, Frank described "premenstrual disturbances of manifold nature." But even after his article, it took a long time for health professionals and for PMS victims themselves to recognize the complaints as legitimate.

Vivian Feldman of Planned Parenthood in Richmond, chief organizer of the conference, told the audience only seven people had attended a meeting on the matter she had offered two years before.

"Women traditionally had been told that these symptoms were psychological," she said. "They were hesitant to seek help."

Saturday's conference, however, drew about 160 people, and a show of hands indicated the vast majority were PMS sufferers themselves.

Their main concern was how to alleviate PMS, and they learned about two basic approaches to treatment: One emphasizes dietary changes and nutritional supplements. The other, for severe cases, prescribes doses of the hormone progesterone.

Abraham, a Los Angeles endocrinologist who specializes in the nutritional approach, called diet the most important factor in the syndrome.

Specifically, he traced the problem to deficiences of magnesium, B-complex vitamins and in some cases other elements and vitamins, coupled with excesses of certain foods such as refined sugar, dairy products and animal fats.

Dr. Ronald Norris, a Boston physician who has founded three PMS treatment clinics around the country, described therapy using progesterone, a hormone that naturally is dominant in the latter half of the menstrual cycle.

Studies have shown that most PMS sufferers have a depressed level of progesterone during this part of the cycle, but an elevated level of estrogen, the hormone which should be dominant during the first half of the cycle.

The severely depressed, suicidal PMS sufferers are an exception to this pattern: Their progesterone level is higher than normal; while the estrogen level is lower.

Norris said the bulk of clinical experience in using progesterone is the work of one woman, Dr. Katharina Dalton, who has treated some 30,000 PMS sufferers with this method over the past three decades and achieved a success rate of about 90 percent.

He said the U.S. Food and Drug Administration finally sat down with Dalton this month to begin an evaluation of her work.

Norris' clinics also have had success using progesterone, and one controlled study of 100 patients revealed a 100 percent success rate, with 77 of the women reporting total elimination of all PMS symptoms and the others reporting substantial improvement.

The progesterone can be administered by injections, but Norris said these are painful and the preferred method is suppositories.

Dr. Guy Abraham: 'If you have it, don't fool around with it'

Abraham described four basic types of PMS, categorized by symptoms which usually go together.

The most common type has as its main symptoms anxiety, irritability, nervous tension and mild to moderate depression.

The second form is characterized by water retention, bloating and breast tenderness.

The third type is symptomized by a craving for sweets, and indulgence in sweets is followed by fainting spells, fatigue, headache, shakes and palpitations.

The fourth type is "the least common but the most dangerous," Abraham said, because it is characterized by deep depression and suicidal feelings.

"If you have it, don't fool around with it; go see someone," he said.

Abraham and Norris agreed that nutritional measures plus some changes in lifestyle — increased outdoor exercise, for instance — should be sufficient to alleviate PMS in moderate cases.

For sufferers in all categories, Abraham recommended the following changes in diet:

- Limiting intake of refined sugar, salt, dairy products, red meat, alcohol, caffeine and nicotine.
- Limiting intake of protein, and relying more on fish, poultry, whole grains and legumes and less on red meat and dairy products for protein.
- Reducing fat intake to constitute less than 20 percent of total calories, with complex carbohydrates such as whole grains and cereals amounting to 60 to 70 percent of total calories.
- Using types of vegetable oil which contain cis-linoleic acid, such as uncooked safflower oil (but not coconut or olive oil).

If these measures prove insufficient, Abraham recommended considering nutritional supplements, primarily magnesium and B-complex vitamins.

Girl needs foster home

Annette, a 16 year old Caucasian girl, who is interested in music, art and dance, needs a foster home until she is 18. She would like to be in a two parent home with perhaps one or two children, but does not want to live with a large family.

Annette (not her real name) is taking ballet lessons, likes to draw and is active in church youth activities. In addition to attending high school she is taking classes at a community college.

She wants to live in Alameda County to be closer to her mother and extended family. Her mother is not able to provide a home for Annette but she does visit.

If you are interested in providing a home for Annette, call Alameda County Foster Home Licensing at 874-5527. The payment for board and care of foster children ranges from $230 to $311 per month depending on the child's age. Medical expenses are covered by Medi-Cal.

Local writers read on aging & changing

ALBANY — The Albany Senior Center will host a free reading from the "Across The Generations" literary anthology on Saturday, March 19, at 1 p.m.

The book, a collection of stories and poems by older and younger writers that attempts to "bridge the gap," is a product of Albany. Working through the Senior Center, editor Marcy Alancraig collected pieces by 68 local writers aged 9 to 98.

The reading in Albany will feature the works of Albany residents Carla Harkness and Mary Hughes. Outreach coordinator Margo Tyndall will read along with local writers Donna Cummings, John Boe, Ron De La Houssaye and Deborah Linten Zike and Kazue Nakahara.

Copies of the collection will be on sale for $6.95 per copy. The anthology has almost completely sold out its first printing.

"Across the Generations" began over a year ago when two students in Alancraig's writing class at the senior center suggested doing a book. Their idea was to use words as a way of drawing the generations together.

The project was supported by six community groups including the center, California Arts Council, East Bay Center for the Performing Arts, Educators Improvement Service, Vista Community Center and the Older Adult Resource Center.

For more information contact the Albany Senior Center, 846 Masonic Avenue, Albany, 644-8500.

Tonight's the Wright night for the Irish

By OLGA BIER

It is indeed a great day for the Irish — as well as the rest of us — when Albany's Jim Wright sings tonight for diners at Northbrae Community Church's Wednesday night community dinner.

Sharing the spotlight with Wright will be his 15-year-old daughter Margaret, who will dance. She has won many awards in Scottish and Irish dancing competitions since she was six.

Her father, a stonemason by trade, is well-known in the Bay Area for his warm tenor voice. He has entertained in clubs and light opera here since 1965, and his repertoire includes Scottish and Irish songs, modern ballads and operatic arias.

It will be an all-Irish program tonight, however, even though a wee bit of a burr might be detected, a reminder of Wright's birthplace in Scotland. He will encourage the audience to join in what he calls "toe tapper," such as "The Same Old Shillelagh." He will also perform "Mother Macree" and "Danny Boy."

Margaret Wright, a sophomore at Albany High School, will perform an original dance. For the occasion, she will wear a green and mauve costume.

Of all her awards, she is most proud of receiving the Gold Medal for best dancer at the Edinborough Festival in Scotland in 1978. She plans to cut back on her competitions for now, however, in order to devote more time to her school studies and her flute.

Her father has no such plans. "I just love to sing," he said happily.

A student of the late Leonardo Ciarlo of Oakland, Wright trained for an operatic career. His wife Nancy says she "plays the sewing machine" but the children are all musical.

Older son Allan, a veterinary student at UC-Davis, is a pianist, and younger son Ian plays the drums. Ian is a member of the Air Force Concert Jazz Band, and heads a musical group of his own as well.

Jim and Margaret Wright have performed at Northbrae dinners many times. The community dinners have been held at the church for 45 years. Prepared by chef Harry Chin and church volunteers, the dinners are preceded by a non-denominational worship service and followed by entertainment.

Reservations for dinner may be made at 526-3805.

Looking for your roots? Class makes search easier

By ROBERTA ALEXANDER

ALBANY — If you're curious to discover if your great-great grandfather was a crook or your great grandmother related to royalty, the appropriately-named Bette Root can help you find out.

Root will teach a beginning genealogy course at the Albany Adult School, which will meet Tuesdays from 7 to 9 p.m. beginning March 22. The class will meet in Room 108 of the high school, 603 Key Route Blvd.

"I've been doing this for 15 years, and I'll tell you, it's not a hobby, it's an addiction," Root said.

Her class will cover genealogy forms, record keeping, personal sources, census documents, federal records centers and library resources.

Root moved to the Bay Area recently in order to go to library school and further her skills as a genealogist. Although Santa Barbara, her previous home, was close enough to Los Angeles for her to take advantage of the genealogical library material there, she thinks the Bay Area is rich in resources.

"You can do a lot from home," she said. "You need to know how to write a decent letter, and how to organize the material when you find it."

How to organize the material is one of the things Root stresses in her 10-week course. She said that many people typically become interested in studying their family tree, do some research, collect some information and stuff the whole business in a shoe box.

"Then when they want to work on it, they dump the whole thing out and look for what they think they have. Soon they get disgusted and give up," she said.

She believes that with properly organized material, a person can set the project aside for weeks or even years and then come back to it easily. And she emphasized that studying one's history is a long-term project.

"I've discovered that I go back to some interesting early American families, but it isn't finished," she said. "Most people are ordinary, stay-out-of-jail types, so that's usually what you find."

"But you do need to have a low boredom point, since each problem that you solve will lead you to new problems."

The reason, she explained, is that anyone researching family history is going backwards, moving from the known to the unknown. So as soon as you discover the existence of another ancestor, you move on to investigate the background of your discovery.

Besides the resources in libraries in the Bay Area, Root also has kind words for the East Bay Genealogical Society, which meets the second Wednesday of the month at 10 a.m. at Breuners meeting room.

"It's important for genealogists to get together and share their enthusiasm," she said.

She hopes to give her students the tools to start on what may become a lifetime project.

"You want to know how to produce a record that goes back three or four generations, learn how to present it to your family, and make sure that it's accurate," she said.

For registration information, call 526-6811 days or 525-7131 evenings.

UC will comply with draft-student aid law

By TRAPPER BYRNE

Ending weeks of speculation, the University of California has announced that it will comply with a new law denying federal financial aid to students who are not registered for the draft.

At the same time, university president David Saxon said UC will support efforts to repeal or modify the law, known as the Solomon Amendment, which is scheduled to go into effect July 1.

The law, authored by Rep. Gerald Solomon, R-NY, requires students applying for Title IV federal funds — including Pell Grants, Guaranteed Student Loans, National Direct Student Loans and the work-study program — to prove either that they have registered for the draft or are not required to do so.

Kate Jeffery, a financial aid analyst with the university, said 23,000 UC students who receive Title IV funds are required to register. She said UC has "no idea" how many of those have not yet registered and would be cut off from federal aid under the new law.

Elissa Urlik of the Berkeley Draft Counseling Center, a group funded in part by UC-Berkeley's student government, said as many as 50 percent of the men in the Bay Area are required to register for the draft have not done so. She also said it is difficult to determine how many Berkeley students would stand to lose their Title IV eligibility because of the new law.

UC-Berkeley student body president Kathy Read asked Chancellor I. Michael Heyman in January to "begin a movement toward the law's repeal" by not enforcing its provisions. Heyman replied that he thought the Solomon Amendment was "extremely unwise," but that the university was devising a systemwide policy on how it should respond.

Saxon announced that policy last week, saying that although the law "inappropriately places the university in a role of enforcing a law unrelated to our educational mission," UC will nevertheless abide by it and withhold Title IV funds from students who have not registered.

In a letter distributed to the chancellors of UC's nine campuses, Saxon also said the university will join efforts "to modify or repeal" the Solomon Amendment before it takes effect.

Pennsylvania Democrat Robert Edgar has introduced in Congress to repeal the Solomon Amendment, and Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., has also sponsored legislation to delay the date the law takes effect until July, 1985.

In addition, the University of Minnesota and Macalester College in St. Paul, Minn., are expected to file friend-of-the-court briefs in support of a lawsuit filed by two Minnesota students asking that the law be overturned.

Urlik said she was unhappy that Saxon's statement didn't go further in its opposition to the Solomon Amendment, but she added that UC was "on the right track" in its decision to lobby for the law's repeal.

Several universities, including Yale and Dartmouth, have announced that they will use existing programs that loan money to students ineligible for federal aid to reimburse students who haven't registered for the draft. Jefffery said the University of California has not yet decided whether to offer loans to UC students who lose their federal funds because of the Solomon Amendment.

Beginners of all ages are welcome, as well as more experienced students. "Students work at their own pace in a relaxed, sociable atmosphere," instructor Marty Halpern said. People who follow a sensible program start to feel more strength and body tone within a few weeks."

The class meets Tuesdays and Thursdays from 7 to 8 p.m. at Albany High School, 603 Key Route Blvd.

Fee: $24 for 10 weeks. To register or obtain more information, call 526-6811 or 525-7311 after 6:30 p.m.

Cutting the rug in 17th century England

The clothing may be California modern, but the music, dancing, and architecture will transport you to 17th century England.

The English country dances sponsored by the Bay Area Country Dance Society are a friendly, lively setting for a centuries old tradition.

English country dancing, an ancestor of modern American square dancing and country fiddling, goes back to the Rennaissance and Baroque periods. "This century has seen a great revival of interest, including the reconstruction of older dances, new dances being composed, and new dance groups starting around the world," said Don Forman of the society.

"Here in the Bay Area we are lucky to have the Claremont Country Dance Band, one of the oldest and best of its kind in the nation," he added.

"The dances are sociable events; one changes partners every dance, and the experienced dancers help beginners, so that no one is left out," Forman said.

Dancers meet twice a month (second and fourth Wednesdays at 8 p.m.) at the John Muir School, 2955 Claremont Ave. (near Ashby) in south Berkeley with caller Bruce Hamilton, the Claremont Country Dance Band, and frequent guest callers and musicians. Admission is $3.50.

Regular dances also take place in Palo Alto and San Jose.

For more information on any of the dances, call Forman at 525-3463.

By Oswald Jacoby
and James Jacoby

South's two-diamond response to the one-heart opening is the correct expert move. He wanted to make sure that North would know that he, South, only held four spades. After that start the bidding proceeded slowly to a rather sporting six diamonds.

South won the diamond lead with his queen over East's nine. A second trump to dummy's king dropped East's jack. Now South was ready to go after hearts. They went king, ace, ruff with a six-spot, which was high since the jack-nine of trumps had dropped. Then it was back to the ace of spades and ruff another heart with his ace. Then back to the ace of clubs to pull West's last trump.

Then South cashed dummy's last trump and fifth heart. The king of spades was his 12th trick.

"You're just too lucky," exploded West. "Would you have bid the slam with the five instead of the six of trumps? Wouldn't you have gone down if I held the jack of diamonds?"

"Not too lucky," replied South. "After all, the spade finesse was off and hearts didn't break 3-3. But I did play the hand pretty well, didn't I?"
